INTRODUCTORY

In compiling and publishing this Directory and Guide of Buckeye Lake the publishers have had two main objects in view. First to fill a long felt need and much needed want, by giving to the hundreds of summer patrons of the Lake a complete history description and directory, which together with the map of Buckeye Lake and all roads leading to it will enable strangers and others at a glance to find any thing at the Lake or in the immediate neighborhoods. Secondly, the publishers have endeavored to boost and advertise Buckeye Lake throughout Central Ohio by pointing out its many interests to those who are yet unacquainted with Ohio's most Popular Inland Summer Resort.

It is their earnest desire to have every detail perfect and they want to assure you that they have expended every effort to make this Directory as near perfect as possible.

This Directory, however used in connection with the registry system at the Post Office at Buckeye Lake and Millersport will be found a great aid in locating anyone staying one or more days at the Lake.

This publication has been made possible by the assistance and co-operation of many residents of the Lake and liberal patronage of our carefully selected advertisers, who are in all cases leaders in their line, and whom we would not hesitate to recommend to our readers.

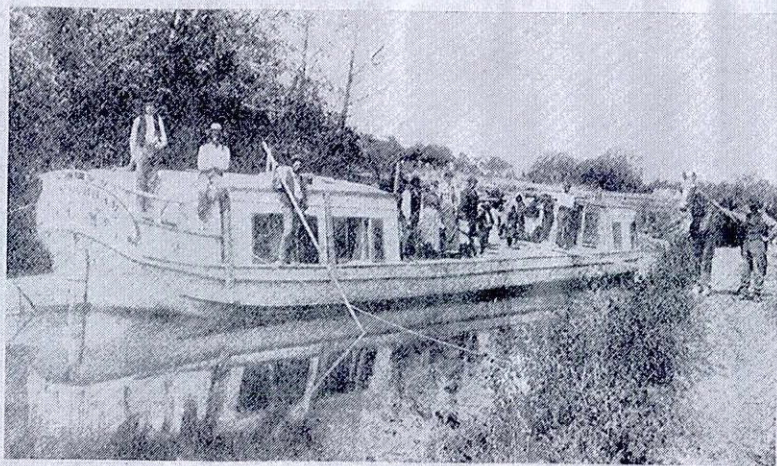

IMPORTANT

Individuals, when inviting friends to visit them at Buckeye Lake, please give them Name of Cottage also the street and addition where Cottage is located.

HISTORY OF BUCKEYE LAKE

Of the thousands of people who annually visit Buckeye Lake for its fine fishing, pleasant boating, invigorating swimming, or varied camping opportunities but few know of its long and interesting history. Much of the present lake lies over a pre-glacial river known to scientists as the Newark River. This river was covered hundreds of feet by glacial drift which, settled along the old river bed valley to form a long narrow pond. Near this pond was a salt spring visited by buffalo and deer. The Indians followed the game, used the salt spring, and fished in the pond.

Christopher Gist, scout for the first Ohio Land Company, visited the pond with some Indians in 1751. He was the first white man to visit the site. Others followed slowly. Elnathan Scofield surveyed the Refugee Tract for the federal government in 1801, and made the first trip that includes "The Pond".

This map was used by the canal surveyers in 1825 when they established the route for the Ohio Canal from Cleveland to Portsmouth, with summits near present Akron and near the headwaters of the Licking or Pataskala River. In their plans "The Pond" of Scofield's map became Licking Reservoir, supplying water for the canal north to the Licking valley and south to the crossing of Little Walnut Creek near present-day Canal Winchester. The reservoir was formed by building a causeway or earthen wall along the northern and western edges of the original pond, including approximately 4200 acres and raising the water level several feet. The first canal boat to pass over this part of the canal did so in the autumn of 1831.

The Reservoir soon proved inadequate to the demands of the canal, so a feeder was planned. This ran from Licking River at Kirkersville to the western end of the reservoir, entering the reservoir by an aqueduct over the canal. Unfortunately the water in the feeder refused to run up hill; as it must have done had it followed the channel and the aqueduct. So the plans were changed. A new reservoir, of about 500 acres, was built north and west of the original one, with a water level the same as the canal's. The old causeway was used as the towpath, the feeder fed the new reservoir, and the foolish "high water" channel eventually became a chicken and duck yard for Bill Harlow.

The completed reservoir cost about $200,000. A more difficult work was the opening of the canal to the south. This necessitated cutting through a ridge 32 feet deep at the maximum, and for a distance of about two miles. Shovels, wheelbarrows, rude ox-carts, and unlimited quantities of common labor moved that ridge, opened the canal, made the hills stand back for the passage of progress. But it was not easily done. Contractors failed, malaria and plague killed hundreds of the laborers, wet weather, dry weather, sticky clays and hard shales, rising wages and freezing earth. The original contract of two years stretched to five before the channel was completed.

The laborers on this Deep Cut lived at Monticello, a village founded in 1803, about a quarter mile to the east. At its height it claimed a population of 1500, with a lively life about Reeds' Tavern. The village boasted a postoffice from 1827 to 1833, but with the completion of the canal the village declined. Some of its buildings were hauled away, others rotted down. Today only a few shards of pottery, the ashes of the smithy, and rarely a coin mark the site. The center of the village was near the turn in Route 204, just south of Millersport.

At the southern end of the Deep Cut stood the South Lock holding the reservoir level. At the lock store here, November 5th, 1867, O. W. Jenkins, the proprietor, was beaten and robbed of $350. Nothing remains of the lock or the store now; they have been replaced by the pools of a state fish hatchery.

The opposite opening of the canal was at the North Lock, near present day Sellar's Point. Here the Minthorn House ministered to the hungry and thirsty boatmen and passengers. From this point a narrow channel followed the north shore, and then wound its dangerous course among the stumps to the extreme east end of the reservoir and the boom town of Thornport.

The owners of this plotted town expected great things of it. Two warehouses were built, mills, a tavern; but the difficulty of the trip across the lake delayed the development. So a "power boat" was built to tow the boats from North Lock to Thornport. This wonder of the age was a broad nosed scow propelled by paddle-wheels which were driven by two horses walking about a horse-motor, which developed more noise than power. So it was abandoned, and the arduous poling of boats resumed. In 1850, the Black Diamond, one of the boats making the trip to Thornport with coal for the Simpson Mills, Captain Ward in charge, ran upon a stump, turned crossways of the channel, and sank. Her memory is preserved in the name of Black Diamond Point on the north shore, the site of the wreck.

As the railroads increased in mileage and efficiency the canals declined and were gradually abandoned. As the Licking Reservoir was never adequate to the demands made upon it in dry summers, the canal it served was abandoned by the boatmen long before the state officially abandoned it. In May 1894 the state legislature made the Licking Reservoir a public park and changed its name to Buckeye Lake. From this time its development as the recreation grounds of central Ohio was rapid; the state lands were leased, private lands were opened as cottage sites and picnic grounds, clubs of fishers and hunters were formed, and much development work perfected. The T. & O. C. and B. & O. railroads brought excursionists to the western and eastern resorts respectively. The Ohio Electric Co. boosted the northern shore by bringing thousands of pleasure seekers from the cities of the state to enjoy the bathing, fishing, and boating there.

The automobile has displaced the older forms of transportation to Buckeye Lake. The state has boxed the lake with state routes, and the three counties, Licking, Fairfield, and Perry, effected by the development of beaches and resorts, have improved their roads until it is possible to reach any point on the lake shore by automobile. This change in means of travel has added impetus to the growth to Buckeye Lake's popularity.

The State Department of Public Works has spent large sums of money improving the lake. By draining the lake in the autumn and cutting the stumps off the surface of the ice, the safety of boating was increased. Numerous channels were cut, old ones dredged deeper, walls were built to prevent washing of the banks, and a new waste weir of concrete erected. These works have made it safe for boats to land at practically every point along the 36 miles of waterfront, approach the 21 islands that dot the lake, and hold races of various types. Row-boats, canoes, outboard and inboard motorboats, speedboats, and yachts are common. The oldest boat on the lake is The Alert, a steel hulled motorboat in the passenger service of the Fisher Boat Co., launched in 1886 as a steamboat and changed to motor power seven years later.

Another department of the state government is responsible for the fine fishing enjoyed by the sportsman at Buckeye Lake. Thousands of young fish are annually released in the lake; some of them having been hatched and developed at the hatchery at the southern end of the Deep Cut, others being shipped in. There are some forty-odd species of fish waiting for the fortunate fisherman.

POINTS OF INTEREST

Sellar's Point is noted for its fishing and beauty. About a mile east along the state leases of the north bank, taken by fine cottages fitted into their positions as though part of the landscape, is the waste weir,—beautiful as the surplus waters of the lake pour over it. A little farther east is Watkin's Island with the club house of the Buckeye Lake Yacht Club. A quarter mile beyond this point is Buckeye Lake Park with all manner of amusements; notably the new bathing beach and dance hall, the mechanical "rides" and Crane Lake.

East of the Park is Harbor Hills, noted for its golf course, is open to the public, an interesting course, Green Fees moderate; the Harbor Hills Polo Club, has a fine regulation polo field, polo clubs from Columbus, Zanesville, Cambridge and other points are scheduled for games during the season, watch for announcements. The Harbor Hills Inn, overlooking Buckeye Lake; and Avondale, with hotel, dance hall, and bathing. From the hills may be seen the cranberry bogs floating on the lake. These relics of the glacial age built up of spagnum mosses and other vegetable matter totaling 40 acres are of interest to students of botany that come from O. S. U., Denison, O. W. U., O. U., and other nearby colleges to examine its fine ferns, the mosses, the cranberry plants, the sundew, the pitcher plants, and other unusual growths. Many of the students suffer from the poison sumac which is common on the bogs.

Most of the resorts on the north bank may be reached from State Route 157. Harbor Hills and Avondale have a road serving them which runs from 157 to Route 13. The latter state route serves Edgewater Beach, cottages and homes, Thornport, cottages and fishing.

State Route 204 serves the whole south shore. Point Beautiful and Honeycreek Park are cottage resorts. Custer's Point is noted for its hotel. Fairfield Beach, with its clubhouse, Batson Beach, and Shell Beach are family resorts. Ross's Place and Alexander's Landing are often classed as the Lancaster Side because of the number of Lancaster people who own cottages thereabouts. Frye's Addition is one of the latest cottage resorts. Summerland Beach is one of the oldest resorts and popular with cottagers; it has a hotel, dance hall, and bathing beach.

At the extreme western end of the lake is Millersport and its additions. By the canal the business district of this thriving village may be reached by boat from any part of the lake. A county road from Millersport north to Route 157 serves, by branch roads, Lieb's Island, Lakeside, Hollywood, and Lieber's Addition. The first is a cottage resort, joined by a bridge to the Fisher Bathing Beach on the old causeway or towpath. The second is one of the oldest developments on the lake, having a hotel and dance hall. The last two are cottage sites.

This accessibility of Buckeye Lake has added to the popularity of it as the recreational center of central Ohio. With natural gas available to most of the cottages, grocery boats calling at all landings, boating, fishing, bathing, picnicking grounds, and commercial amusements Buckeye Lake offers attractions for all recreationists. Built as a means of serving the development of the state and to provide cheap transportation this body of water has become Ohio's Playground.
